

Dr. Oliver Cromwell Cox was an internationally famous professor who wrote several sociology books for which I possess Recordation Certificates that were approved and issued to me by the United States Copyright Office.

Last December, it was brought to my attention that Troy L. Williams of Questia Media was, and still is, illegally selling the opportunity to read my uncle's books on his online library for $166 a year per customer. Further, he asserted to my publishers that Questia ~ which started its business in January 1999 ~ has the right to publish my uncle's books; however, he chose to ignore the fact that the laws have since been amended to 95 years of copyright coverage for authors. On Wednesday, January 15, 2003, the United States Supreme Court upheld the longer copyright extension to Walt Disney thereby setting precedence and enforcing the extension.

On several occasions, my publishers and I asked Mr. Williams to remove all my uncle's books from his data or pay royalties. Contracts exist only between Monthly Review, Stylewriter Publications and me for all books. Attempts that I personally made were ignored. It was my publishers who made his position known to me.

To immediately resolve this matter, Mr. Williams must remove my uncle's books from his data base immediately, as his library is grossly affecting my sales, and because the rate of royalties is 75% of the cost of the books, a $10,000 payment is definitely in order. Based on his conduct, I do not want to transact business with either him or his company.

Thank you.

Cordially,

Juliet Awon Uibopuu